Report on Health Services and Programs at Abbas Laghrour University

Abbas Laghrour University hosts 10,321 students, including 489 graduates in healthcare professions. The university has established multiple agreements and collaborations in various healthcare fields with hospitals, including maternity and child health facilities as well as community health centers, to improve health outcomes.

The university also strives to provide several community awareness programs, which include educating the public about the risks of diabetes, encouraging blood donation, and promoting prevention of breast cancer and cervical cancer.

Additionally, the university regularly participates in numerous sports events, both local and national. Despite significant efforts in various health areas, the university does not offer services related to sexual and reproductive health.

However, the university remains committed to supporting the health of its students and staff by providing access to mental health support services. It also enforces a “smoke-free campus” policy throughout all university spaces, ensuring a healthy and safe environment for everyone.
